Contributors to This Issue

MARY AUSTIN, of Santa Fe, has identified herself with New Mexico, its life and its interests, through many books and articles, among them The Land of Journey's Ending, The American Rhythm, and Starry Adventure. She is at present seeing her Autobiography through the press.

WITTER BYNNER also lives in Santa Fe, and is one of the best known lyric poets of America. He has written a number of plays and is said to be working on a novel.

JOSÉ GARCIA VILLA has lived in New Mexico for the greater part of two years and has written for the QUARTERLY a number of stories of his homeland, the Philippines, and of his adopted home, the Southwest. Albuquerque has been his home in the state.

IRENE FISHER lives in Albuquerque, where she divides her time between journalism and writing poetry.

DAVE NEUMANN is a student and critic of art and letters, who has done graduate work in a number of American universities, and has lived in a number of European art centers. His article comes from his home on the Acequia Madre in Santa Fe.

NELDA SEWELL is a resident of Old Albuquerque, where she is one of a group who are interested in the native backgrounds of the Southwest.

LOLITA POOLER is a student of New Mexico folk-lore. She is a member of the Modern Language Department of the University of New Mexico.

JOE A. PEDRO, TEOFILA LUCERO, JUAN ARAGON are students at the Albuquerque Indian School, where they are encouraged to give literary expression to the folk tales of their pueblo people.
